Brian

Youâ€™ll make it out of here, Brian. I swear.

I had everythingâ€™ school quarterback, popular with girls, and my dad was proud of me. I told myself it didnâ€™t matter no one knew the real me. And then I nearly died. Landon saved my life. Heâ€™s the bravest guy I know. He came out a few years ago, proud and fierce, and he ran into gunfire to help others. Me, Iâ€™m a mess. Canâ€™t even stand to be in a room with the curtains open. But hereâ€™s the thing about losing it all: You get a chance to start over and be someone new. Only how can I move on when the two shooters who attacked our school were never caught? And why do I feel like Iâ€™m still in the crosshairs?

Landon

Will you kiss me?

When I came across Brian Marshall, the hottest guy in school, dying on the cafeteria floor, I did what anyone would do. I tried to save him. His request surprised me, but I figured he needed comfort, so I kissed him on the forehead. When he survived and came back to school, he was broken in body and mind. He still needed me, and soon we were unlikely besties. But what I saw at school that day woke me up. I want to demand action on gun control, lead protests, raise my fist. Iâ€™ll tear the world down if I have to. And if I can get the man of my dreams and save the world at the same time? Iâ€™ll take it. Only I didnâ€™t understand that the horror at Jefferson Waller High wasnâ€™t over.
